

LITTLE HORKESLEY

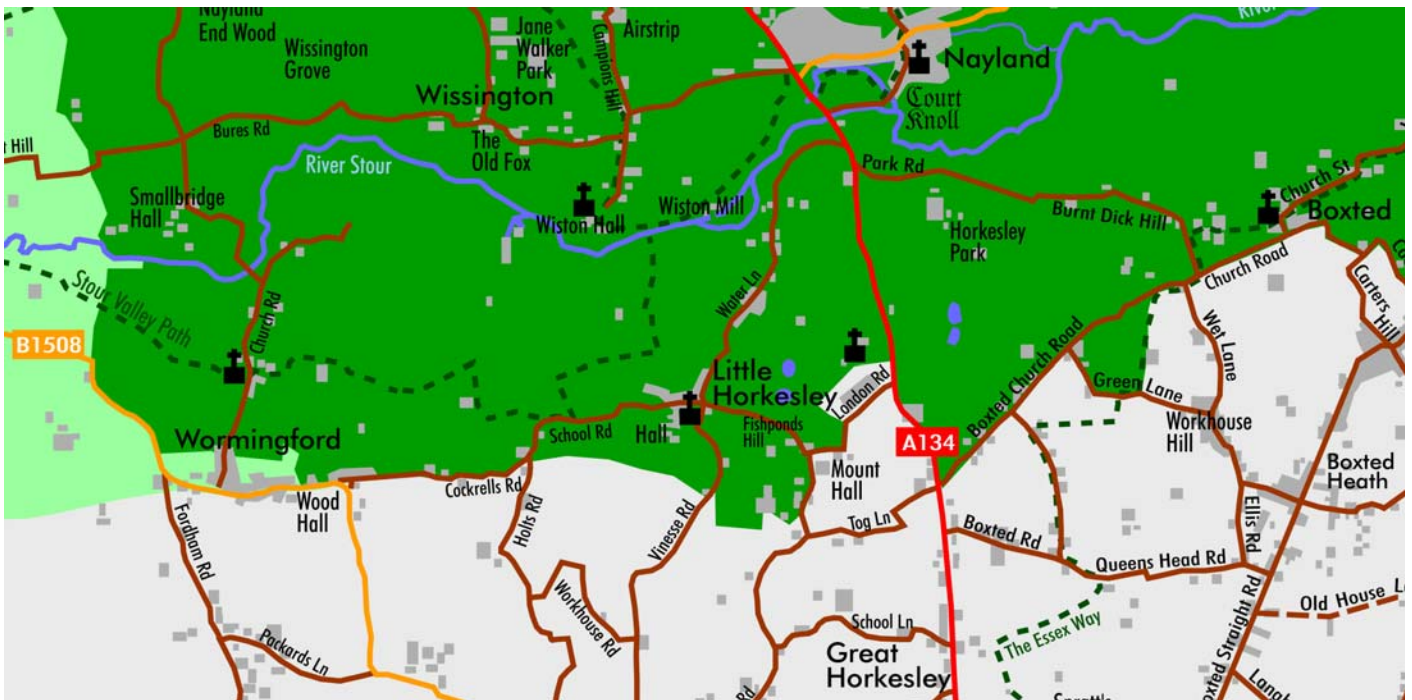

Little Horkesley, to the western end of the Vale, is one of the smaller parishes in the Dedham Vale having less than 200 population. There are many beautiful walks along the southern flank of the River Stour, which is the border between Essex and Suffolk.

The main point of interest is the medieval church, which in fact was built in the 1950s, the original church having been destroyed by enemy action in 1940. Well worth a visit as many of the techniques used in the reconstruction were developed by a study of medieval building practices.

The village has a wealth of listed Tudor houses primarily in Water Lane but an interesting property is a French Chateau, beautiful in all its details, which was constructed in the 1950s.

St. Peter and St Paul Church

The village of Little Horkesley lies within the Dedham Vale AONB which is marked green